1. Democratic ownership: Democratic ownership refers to a system in which the ownership and control of an organization or enterprise is shared collectively by its members or stakeholders. It emphasizes the principles of participatory decision-making, equal rights, and accountability among all members.

2. Cooperatives: Cooperatives are organizations that are owned and democratically controlled by their members, who can be customers, employees, or other stakeholders. The primary objective of cooperatives is to meet the common needs and aspirations of their members through a jointly owned and democratically controlled enterprise.

3. Community businesses: Community businesses are enterprises that are rooted in and operated for the benefit of a specific community or locality. They are often established to address local needs and improve the social, economic, and environmental well-being of the community. Community businesses can include a wide range of sectors, such as retail, energy, housing, or food.

4. Community interest companies: Community Interest Companies (CICs) are a specific legal form of company in the United Kingdom. CICs are designed to benefit the community or pursue a social purpose, rather than maximizing profits for shareholders. They are required to operate for the benefit of the public and have a community interest statement outlining their activities and intended impact.

5. Community benefit societies: Community Benefit Societies, also known as co-operative societies or industrial and provident societies, are organizations that are owned and controlled by their members for the benefit of the community. They operate on a democratic basis, with members having a say in the decision-making processes. Community benefit societies can be involved in a range of activities, such as providing community services, affordable housing, or renewable energy projects.

~You must always be willing to truly consider evidence that contradicts your beliefs, and admit the possibility you may be wrong. Intelligence isn't knowing everything, it's the ability to challenge everything you know. Let's all give up our fear as a justification for not to take action because we are the creators of our reality.
