Updated information,

The claim that Vancouver abandoned the 15-minute City concept is inaccurate. The City has simply rebranded it as “Connected and Accessible Neighborhoods,” but the core idea remains intact. This concept promotes equitable access to essential services within a short distance, ensuring all community members can thrive without the need for extended travel times. While some in the building industry may view this as a restriction, it’s essential to prioritize equity and accessibility for everyone. By adhering to this vision, we can foster creativity and innovation in urban planning, ensuring that all residents benefit from a well-designed community. Let’s focus on implementing this concept collaboratively, rather than extending travel times that dilute its effectiveness. We have to keep in mind of reducing sprawl.

~You must always be willing to truly consider evidence that contradicts your beliefs, and admit the possibility you may be wrong. Intelligence isn't knowing everything, it's the ability to challenge everything you know. Let's all give up our fear as a justification for not to take action because we are the creators of our reality.
