Farm land is precious, and very hard to replace once it has been lost. We do need to have space for our growing population - no argument about that! But it has been shown beyond doubt that we have enough space and land to accommodate the population growth expected over the next 20 year, the time boundary for this plan. Our Washington law allows for the expansion of Urban Growth Areas only when there is not enough space and land within current boundaries. This is the "law of the land" in our great state, and it reflects our desire to limit expansion and retain our farmland, open spaces and forests.

I expect and request our Clark County Council to follow the law.
